ABSTRACT
Usage of social media is becoming popular all over the world in the recent years at a progressively rising rate. The coming up of social media in corporations has introduced a new way of communication amongst employees. But despite of this increased usage of social media by employees in the organizations there is very inadequate understanding of the motivations to use of social media for work purposes. And especially after the outbreak of covid-19 situation worldwide, employees are required to work from home using social media platforms. Thus, the role of social media has significantly increased for employee's work. This study explores how hedonic and utilitarian motivations influence the social media usage for job related activities of employees before and during covid-19 times. Responses from 600 employees from IT sector were used to observe the effect of motivation on social media usage for both before and during the pandemic situation. The study found that utilitarian motivation has impact on social media usage under both the situations i.e. before and during covid-19 whereas the impact of hedonic motivations is found to be insignificant before and significant during covid-19 situation.

Keywords: Social media, motivations, utilitarian, hedonic, covid, work from home.

INTRODUCTION
Social media is becoming popular and are progressively used in almost all the companies whether small, medium or large. (Lee et al., 2008; Oximo, 2008; Letherbriotti & Giannakos, 2014). In spite of widespread use of social media, little is known on its usage in the organizations (Denyer et al., 2011). This study concentrates on employees in order to examine the motives why the employees are making use of social media for their job-related activities. Further in this study such motivations to use social media for work purpose have also been studied during the covid-19 times. Subsequent to its advent in Wuhan city in China, the Coronavirus has now spread to nearly the whole world capturing a substantial toll of human lives. In the ongoing covid-19 outbreak, the social media also observe extraordinary traffic (Dixit, 2020). In this situation of physical risk, and social distancing, the role of the diverse mass media networks and social media cannot be underrated (Hussain, 2020). Covid-19 epidemic has imposed the idea of "Work from Home" into a formally assigned, stringently prescribed rule. As the employees have faced a new atmosphere, there is a necessity to understand their professional social media usage before and during covid-19 situations.

REVIEW OF LITERATURE
There are studies related to use of social media in context of companies. There are also studies related to usage of social media by employees within the organization by making use of enterprise social media (Alahmad, Pierce, Carter, & Robert, 2018; Huang, Singh, & Ghose, 2011; Suh & Bock, 2015) and also social networking platform in public.

Social media usage at workplace
According to a research by TeamLease, a human resource service concern, personnel spent on an average 2.35 hours every day on social media. It is not only being used by companies to tie to customers and promote their products /services but as well has become part of professional-life of employees at workplaces. It has brought revolution at workplace in several ways. (Ferreira & Plessis, 2009). (Frabuddeai, 2011) in the study of 26 nations found that 29% of the workforces use social media to profile themselves as personnel, however in India 78% of the employees use social media to profile themselves to find occupations and many of them use it to prepare themselves for a job interview. For the speedy growth of the social media and their users (Jarrabi & Sawyer, 2012) the necessity for examination of the use of social media for work related objects has arisen. And moreover, during covid-19 pandemic situation to follow the social distancing norms, employees are under obligation to work from home through online mode. For this reason, the platform has become even more important.

Motivations to use social media for job purpose
One of the recognized motivational types is utilitarian and hedonic motivations (van der Heijden, 2004; Kim and Hwang, 2012; Wakefield and Whitten, 2006) which we will be using in the present study. Both hedonic and utilitarian effects social media usage intensity (Raacke and Bonds-Raacke, 2008; Sabharwal et al., 2008; Hui et al., 2011; and Alarcon-del-Amo et al., 2012). Utilitarian motivations are derivative of an economic idea to state system's extrinsic and work-oriented motivations. It is recommended that coherent work attitude and goal-oriented activities relate to utilitarian motivations (Chu et
